Energy & Books

The Friends of the Linda Vista Library have an energy conservation idea to share with Star-News readers.

Why not turn off the color television set — a big energy consumer — a couple of evenings a week and curl up with a good book from the Pasadena Public Library.

Books are available on any subject which might interest you and they're free so you can conserve money as well as energy.

Pasadena has nine libraries, one within a mile of every resident. You could even save gasoline and walk.

Dear boys and girls -

This is just a note to tell you how very much I look forward to seeing you on the afternoon of Thursday, November 8th, at 4 o'clock. When we get together you can ask me all the questions you like about writing books or about the books I've written for you, and I'll do my best to answer them. So be ready with your questions, right here in this library.

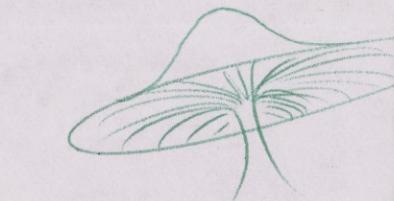

Until then -

every good wish from your friend,

Eleana Cameron

Tyco wants to send you his greetings, too!

THE POCKET READER

Violence, Varlets in Medieval England

BY WILLIAM S. MURPHY

• The historical novel which a decade ago was an anathema in publishing circles is enjoying a renewed popularity. One of the most gifted writers in this field today is Cecelia Holland, who at 30 has already a half dozen distinguished novels to her credit.

In the trade, Miss Holland's books are termed "sword swingers," or "costume novels," and in her case the delineation is laudatory. Miss Holland's field of history is medieval England, and she captures the violence of the age with a dramatic flair that is a delight to a growing audience of readers.

Romance is always of secondary importance in Miss Holland's narratives. The damsels are mostly confined to musty castles where they occupy themselves in gossip and minor intrigue.

The principal characters are knights, barons and lords who spend most of their time on the battle-fields at war with their adversaries. During moments of relaxation, they eat in the manner of barbarians, drink copiously and fight among themselves.

Ballantine has reprinted two of her novels in paperback—"The Earl" and "The Firedrake." In the former, the time is 1153, when Henry Plantagenet, Duke of Normandy, challenged King Stephen's right to the crown of England. The barons chose sides and it would be a bloody business before the issue was settled. "The Firedrake" is set in 1066 during the Norman Conquest, and culminates with the skill of a military historian. One can almost hear the ring of steel upon steel as Laeghaire, a mercenary knight serving the invader, charges into the conflict:

"The foot soldiers ran in first, with half the archers. The arrows of the archers dropped harmlessly against the shield wall . . . Laeghaire trembled all over. The stallion plunged and curved his neck . . . Suddenly the defenders on the hill loosed a rain of missiles on them. Many of the front soldiers fell.

"The knights galloped down, threading through the retreating foot soldiers . . . They struck the shield wall . . . A fence of axes rose before them. Laeghaire hurled his lance and drew his sword. The stallion reared, clawing at the wall. Laeghaire bent down and slashed awkwardly at a helmeted head. The head swung back when he struck it. An ax reached for him. He thrust it away with his sword. He felt a tight binding in his chest . . . He shouted and took the sword in both hands and smashed at the housecarl below him. Suddenly the man vanished . . ."

And there is no shortage of such action-packed passages. It would be difficult to envision Cecilia Holland writing Gothic romances.

Dear Ladies,

Just a note to say again for the opportunity coming to your library to see films during our summer school session. Since our children are all handicapped to some extent in reading, you can appreciate how much they enjoy seeing such interesting films as were shown.

Sincerely,
(m) Mabelly Baum,
